The Committee Secretary
Water reform

Thank you for the opportunity to make a simple submission to the Committee.

It is assumed that the NSW Government is serious about water reform.

Being naive the following come to mind:-

1. The selfish side of human nature means that we need to increase the number of inspectors to catch anyone interfering with the water meters & similar naughtiness. No tip offs please.

2. Can the NSW Government re-enter negotiations with the Murray basin Commission. A flawed agreement is better than none at all. Our nation will benefit if the Murray-Darling is kept alive. (No wonder South Australia gets fed up with the upstream states)

3. Engage in some quid pro quo negotiations with Queensland, in the hope that they will want to enforce their water regulations. e.g. Perhaps by reducing environmental charges for dumping rubbish in NSW, bottom line driven "recyclers" may not to dump so much metropolitan waste in southern Queensland.
